JONCE & SMILEY
—THE BOY WHO HAD NO FRIENDS.

A NEW ENGLAND TALE.
By the Author of "Sandries."

CHAPTER IV.

The West! Where is it? Once bounded by the limits of the Atlantic States, as the new state after state was formed, limited by the Mississippi, it is now bounded only by the Pacific. At the time of our tale, however, the Great West, comparatively little of it as had been settled, seemed more vast than at present; for while no one dreamed of the Oregon as a practicable place of settlement, the continent seemed boundless, and the expectations of those who tempted the wilderness in pursuit of a better change in their condition, were as vast and as vague as their ideas of the territory upon which they entered. Nor were these great expectations to be tested without great sacrifices. No railroads made the desire to travel and the accomplishment of mind and body almost simultaneous. The canal had not intersected the country with its easy and cheap means of conveyance. Turnpikes even were almost unknown, and through tracts of country where thousands of travelers now rush with almost the lightning's speed, the emigrant laboriously worked his way through what were barely paths in the forest, in which the blow of his own axe might not unfrequently be necessary to facilitate his progress. Men departed for the newer New World, as for a country where children might be born to them, whose children would perhaps find the comforts of civilized life coming out to them in the desert. If many of these pioneers have found themselves surrounded with more dense neighborhoods than they dared hope their grandchildren would live among, it was more than the most sanguine prophets among them would have ventured to predict.

Jonce Smiley was not man enough to fear very definitely of the future—but, childlike, despite of his bruises, he slept comfortably in the assurances that he should be able at least to turn himself in the morning, before his tormentors would get hold of him. He did not dream of what the kind emigrant proposed to do for him, but vague visions crossed his slumbers of glorious freedom—of a country where there would be no Peletiah Perkins, and no son John, the latter to do mischief, and the former to punish Jonce for John's misdeeds. He had heard of the West as a place where there were no people, and as his notions of population were estimated by the number of their shoe soles—(boots in those days were not so common)—he thought that land a paradise where the pedal tally of the numbers of the inhabitants would not be marked upon his flesh at a faster rate than one to each of the four-and-twenty hours. He dreamed of picking up cents without having them forcibly taken from him; and of sundry other things, which, once in his hands, could have a property in, undisputed, because there should be none to dispute with him. He dreamed too of going to bed without having his hands cuffed; and as he lay on the night of his nigra from Hardscrabble, actually enjoyed this happiness. It is no wonder that such strange a thing should occur to him in vision.

But alas for Jonce! screams of napping, to the poor and weary, are "through by daylight." Jonce awoke to a sort of indefinite surprise as to where he could be, and how he came there. As he sprang from the bed a dull ache or two in different parts of his maimed body recalled him to himself. Jonce sighed, and descended to take such steps for the future as chance or circumstance might dictate—but upon one thing he determined with the first breath of the morning—he would not return to Hardscrabble. His first impulse was to run away from his present friend and protector; then he recollects that he could just as well take leave of, and thank him; as he could conceive no motive why the emigrant should wish to detain or control him; and the unlucky boy really felt a painful, heartily grateful to the man who had pitted, and the woman who had lashed his bruises. Children quickly attach themselves where they meet—form treatment; and Jonce Smiley was already more attached to the children—nay to the very dog of the emigrant, than to any living thing in Hardscrabble. Perhaps he did remember his mother—but it was more as a duty than a pleasure that he thought even of her.

Upon inquiring for the emigrant, and finding him absent, his misgivings returned—not were they at all abated when the emigrant's wife told him that her husband was gone back to Hardscrabble "to see about him." All Jonce's ideas ran in one painful channel, and whenever any one had promised to "see about him," it had usually ended in an operation which made him "feel about him" as if he had been rolled down hill in a barrel, with its sides full of nails, points inward. Nevertheless, Jonce ate a hearty share of the emigrant fam-

A Voice from Collins Bay.

Up early and out in all weathers in pursuance of his daily work, a farmer, of all men, needs a strong and sound constitution, and is least likely to bear with patience the inroads of disease. Mr. Wm. Tait, farmer, Collins Bay, Ont., was afflicted with scatic rheumatism in December last. He suffered excruciating pain, and for ten days he tossed on a bed of agony. He tried Dr. Hall's Rheumatic Cure, and the effect was magical. His pains left him after several doses had been taken, and now Mr. Tait says: "I would strongly urge anyone suffering with rheumatism to use Dr. Hall's Rheumatic Cure, and I will guarantee the best results."

Dr. Hall's Rheumatic Cure is put up in 50 cent bottles, containing ten days' treatment. For sale by all druggists and dealers in medicine. The Dr. Hall Medicine Co., Kingston, Ont.

Jonathan! Jonathan!" called his mother. But Jonce had been so long the answering proxy for others, let echo be his proxy, and echo's answers are never very satisfactory.

"This is bad," said Mr. Berry. "For I long to be on my way." As he placed a foot upon the wall, to rest his elbow on his knee, a stone fell—Jonce's head escaped by just a quarter of an inch, and he was on his legs, and darting through the tavern-keeper's standing corn like Sampson's foxes, or like a beast through a cane-brake, in less than an instant.

"Jonathan!" shouted the emigrant. "No you don't!" said Jonce to himself, as he gathered over ground like a race-horse.

"Jonce, my boy!" cried the

Deacon in a loud but kind tone at the fugitive.

"You caught me with fair word once," said Jonce to himself, "but the same error isn't caught twice in the same trap."

Pursuit the Deacon knew was hopeless, and the emigrant could not long delay. So after an hour's fruitless waiting for the runaway to return, the emigrant took his weary road, as much grieved as if he had lost one of his own family, and the Deacon and Mrs. Smiley turned back to Hardscrabble, the latter wondering, as she alternately cried and scolded, how the boy could treat his mother so. The Deacon said nothing, nor did he feel quite so much surprised, or so much anger again; poor Jonce, as he might have felt under similar circumstances on the day before.

Poor Jonce! He had then refused to launch upon the very tide which might have borne him on to fortune! But how could he have known that?

CHAPTER V.

Jonce, in his escape from fancied dangers, as recorded in the last chapter, ran as long as his limbs would support him, fancying at every step that he heard people in pursuit, or that he heard his mother, the Deacon, and the emigrant shouting after him to come back. It is a singular fact that though a boy may feel that he is out of sight and out of reach of the person calling, he cannot feel safe while he hears their voices; being conscious of a sort of fascination which he fears may carry him back within the reach of the arm from which he has removed himself. A curious fact though this be, it is a fact nevertheless; as you, reader, may chance to remember, unless you were one of the white hen's chickens, and never heard cackle imperative, being always summoned by a coaxative cluck. Leaving this point to be settled by some of the 1st who are going up and down the earth in search of matter for theory, we will return to the wanderings of Master Jonathan Smiley.

When he could run no longer, he was saved the trouble of deciding what he would next do, by the giving out of his legs, and their utter refusal to bear him farther. He sank down in fatigue and complete exhaustion; and in the prostration of mind and body which naturally followed his almost superhuman exertions, he first cried—and then went to sleep. He had a long and hideous dream. He fancied that, for some misdeemeanor, he was pursued—caught—and tied to a tree. He felt the cords with which he was bound press upon his limbs until they ached, and he would have kicked but could not, for his feet were tied. He heard the crack of the whip with which Peletiah Perkins was preparing to torment him, and awoke. As he rubbed his eyes, he could hardly persuade himself, so fearfully distinct had been the scene, that it was but a dream; and he lay long motionless, before he could reconcile what had seemed so terribly like the truth, with the solitude which reigned around him.

But the unfortunate boy was not alone. The eye which never sleeps had watched—the Providence which never tires had guarded his slumbers. Little recked he the imminent danger through which he had passed, as safely as unconsciously. The basilisk eye of that terror of the American forest—the rattlesnake—disturbed by his intrusion upon the reptile's domain—had glinted in vain upon the drowsy boy, and he had sunk quietly to sleep, under the unsuspecting gaze of the serpent, which had been awake, would have terrified him into imminent danger—perhaps into certain death. The admontory rattle of the serpent served but to furnish part of the machinery of his dream, and the aches which made him fancy that he was fast bound, and could not stir, secured that quiet of his limbs, which disarmed the most noble of all reptiles of his purpose. The serpent, before Jonce was thoroughly awakened, had glided away, and Jonce was spared the horror of finding not only unfeeling man, but the very animals of a lower creation, arrayed against him.

The boy was hungry. He thought himself back to his thankless meal in his mother's house, and was in imagination almost tempted to forego it, in view of the more piquant that pleasant sause which would attend it, garnished with tongue, as it invariably was. But while his fancy rejected a meal so unsavory, the recollection came that he had abjured, altogether, farther such fare in his mother's dwelling; he remembered that he was a fugitive, and the emigrant's wagon, with the sum of his savings, had stopped it; and the mother of the wandering family was chafing his hands and his temples. He heard the blows of an axe, and looking out for the cause, found the emigrant cutting in pieces for removal, a tree which had fallen across, and blocked the path a tree which but for Jonce would have fallen upon, and crushed the emigrant family.

How still, how calm was that summer evening after the furious tempest which but an hour before had seemed to presage almost the destruction of the world. Not a twig—not a leaf stirred, save where here and there one might gently—

Town Waterworks.

Fourteen Commissioners Were Nominated Friday Evening.

FIRE HALL MATTERS RECEIVED ATTENTION ALSO.

Looks as if There Might Be a Contest—Nominees Have Until This Evening at 9 o'clock in Which to Withdraw Their Names—New Fire Hall Urged as a Matter of Prime Importance.

According to notice, Town Clerk Knowlson attended at the town hall last Friday night to receive nominations for the newly-created offices of Waterworks commissioners. For a time business was slack owing to a lack of material, but when half of the hour had passed there occurred a small eruption of ratepayers and nominations were handed up with a briskness that was cheering as an augury of a long list. When the hour had expired Mr. Knowlson read the following as the official list of nominees:

Richard Sylvester, proposed by T. Stewart, seconded by Wm. Flavelle.

John D. Flavelle, proposed by G. H. M. Baker, seconded by Alex. Jackson.

J. R. McNeillie, proposed by John McDonald, seconded by G. H. M. Baker.

Thos. Walters, proposed by G. H. Lytle, seconded by Jas. H. Lennon.

Thos. Brady, proposed by J. D. Flavelle, seconded by Thos. Stewart.

J. M. Keih, proposed by Richard Touchburn, seconded by Joseph Rickaby.

W. M. Robson, proposed by Joseph Rickaby, seconded by Richard Touchburn.

John M. McLennan, proposed by Robt. Chambers, seconded by Thos. Stewart.

G. H. Hopkins, proposed by James Graham, seconded by G. H. M. Baker.

Richard Kylie, proposed by George Lytle, seconded by Wm. Flavelle.

James Graham, proposed by J. H. Scovron, seconded by Wm. Flavelle.

James Boxall, proposed by Samuel Britton, seconded by James Boxall.

Alex. Ross, proposed by G. W. Mills, seconded by W. M. Robson.

John Duke, proposed by Thos. Connolly, seconded by Sam. Walker.

Clerk Knowlson then stated that nominees who wished to withdraw their names must do so in writing before 9 p.m. Saturday, and that in case more than the required three names then remained a poll of votes would be taken on Friday, June 1st.

THE AFTER MEETING.

On motion Ald. J. Clarkson was voted to the chair to preside over the after meeting. His first official act was to invite the small bunch of ratepayers present to move forward where he might see them. He then stated that he would call upon the nominees in inverse order, and reminded the speakers that expressions of opinion upon fire hall as well as Waterworks matters would be in order.

Mr. John Duke, the first speaker, said he had had much of experience in waterworks construction and management on the other side of the line, and having closely surveyed the work on the Lindsay system, could say it had been well built. In his opinion the pipes leading across the river, should be in duplicate, but the back-action hydrants were the best for our northern climate. It was said that the commissioners would have nothing to do; that Supt. Begbie would do all the work. That gentleman had a hold of the system when it was not giving satisfaction, and had worked it up to its present fine shape, but should he be re-

LINDSAY, FRIDAY, JUNE 8, 1900

LOCAL NEWS-LETTERS

AMBERLY.

(From Our Correspondent.)

Don't forget the Beaverfoot Oldfathers annual excursion to Hamilton on Saturday, June 10, 1900, tickets leave at 7:00, fare $1.00, children 75¢—etc.

KINROSS.

(Special Correspondent of The Post.)

Entertaining bohemian Fred Dugay, who has been a member of the Committee, "Dove" in the company of his wife, Mrs. Dugay, and son, Mr. Deacon intended to make about five hundred dollars in the course of his tour. Fred is a lively, good-natured man.

Miss Minnie Collins of Galtway, who has been here with Mr. and Mrs. Dugay, and Mr. McCall, were in Lindsay on Friday, June 6, 1900, and are up-to-date bungalowites.

OMERSA.

(From Our Correspondent.)

Farmers are busy harvesting their crop of wheat, and the weather is well after so much dry weather.

There is a great deal of cattle and hogs here, and the market is good.

The Omersa cheese factory is re-opening, and the new cheese is very good. The proprietors with Mr. McMillan, managers are filling the bill.

“PULLING THINGS TO PIECES”

GREAT CASH SALE of

$70,000 STOCK OF DRY GOODS

The 20th of July We Take in Another Store.

It means that everything in the house will be pulled out and shifted anywhere to get out of the dust, for we must tear down walls, put in new ceilings, lay new floors, in fact the whole place will be upside down. The less goods we have when work begins the better. Prices will be discounted on every article in the store, and clearing lines will appear in every department at from 25 to 50 per cent under price.

No doubt the fact that we are offering our stock at big discounts in spite of the recent advance in price of Dry Goods, may seem rather extraordinary--almost too good to be true--but we assure you that we would rather make this sacrifice than carry the goods through the dust and the extra amount of work and time lost in shifting stocks around. Cash is required for special discounts.

The list of prices below will give an idea of the trend of some of the values we are offering during this sale :

Ladies' Department.

LINDSAY, FRIDAY, JUNE 29, 1900

CITIZENS OF VICTORIA

Have you had time to salute the Queen? You would be improved by a change of Government! What would be raised?

Would employment be more comfortable?

Was the country in 1895 governed in such a way as to give comfort to all?

Did the bolt of 1895 not respond to the Queen?

Has there been any indication that the difficulties which have been met up with in getting to work in the administration, culminating in the Selkirk affair, will be remedied?

When the country is well off, and showing every indication of healthy growth, would the Queen be comfortable to make an express?

If you had a good experience, would the Queen be comfortable to adopt such a policy?

Has not the Queen, with such entirely new conditions at the opening of the session, and the coming of the Queen in South Africa, acquitely and well, after a eighteen years of opposition, is it not likely to do still better for royal expressions? (The Queen, I say, Queen!)

It is a sound argument for a change!

LINDSAY'S GREAT CELEBRATION,

It is many years since Lindsay celebrated the anniversary of Confederation in fitting fashion, but it is but recently that the Queen has been met with along the line of any effort made in the past to provide entertainment for the Queen. The object aimed at is the pleasure of every citizen. It is the pride of every citizen to have the Queen in their city.

It is necessary to give some attention to the Queen's needs as the last in her tour on post and programmes, and when the Queen is here, the Citizens of Victoria are very anxious for a suitable reception.

The Queen will be received at the Exhibition Hall of the provincial Victoria County Hospital. It is a necessity to give some attention to the Queen's needs as the last in her tour on post and programmes, and when the Queen is here, the Citizens of Victoria are very anxious for a suitable reception.

It is pleasant to read the growing spectre of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir Charles Tupper in the Canadian parliament, and it is pleasant to see that the Queen is the appropriate one to receive the Queen.

What the Queen apparently believes that "many battlers have yet to be fought," the problems which will be met with in the Queen's tour will be met with pride and satisfaction by every Canadian. It is a great relief to the Queen to have the Queen

in the Queen's tour, and the Queen
will take part in the celebration.

A DESERVED COMPLIMENT.

The following passage from that influential journal the British Weekly of London, June 27, 1900, should be read with pride and satisfaction by every Canadian. It is a great relief to the Queen to have the Queen

in the Queen's tour, and the Queen
will take part in the celebration.

It is pleasant to read the growing
spectre of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and
Sir Charles Tupper in the Canadian parliament, and it is pleasant to see

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A REALLY SICK MAN

SUFFERED TERRIBLE AGONY
DURING HIS LIFE

TO DIE.

The bicycle never recd a greater compliment than it has from the man who made it, who states that its general use interferes with their business. It is certain that the Queen will be gratified by the words of Sir Charles Tupper when he writes to the Queen.

So much ice is required in the Alta, east of the Rockies, that they try to go through the Straits of Behring for some weeks.
The steamer, the Queen, has the best of the operations of the fast Alta lines, but Sir Charles Tupper wishes to add to his line.

Robert Birmingham's resignation as Secretary of the Conservative Association is a great blow to the Alta people. Mr. Birmingham and Mr. Thompson have been appointed in his place. If the new men will do what they are told, the Queen will be pleased.

Montreal should be a compliment to the Queen.
